EDITOR'S NOTE

No, your eyes do not deceive you, this is the Summer issue. I have a theory that if I hold back this issue, perhaps summer itself will obligingly wait for me. Perhaps it worked, at least to an extent. Indian summer was delightful in Madison this year, but the other day, as I retrieved the working file for this issue, the wind switched to the north and the first few flakes of snow appeared in the air. This morning I noticed ice on the little pond of water that gathers in a corner of our roof. That pond is handy for the pair of ducks which frequently nest on the roof. It gives their ducklings a protected place to learn to swim, although the building manager usually has a hard time catching them and transporting them to a more normal environment on the shores of Lake Mendota.

Eventually I will have to admit that even fall has passed. Already the busy on-campus interview season is drawing to a close, and signs of a tightening market for graduates have appeared. Over the past three and a half years, more than two hundred different employers, about two-third from outside Wisconsin, have interviewed here. We are proud of our students and feel that our assessment is confirmed by the interviewers who visit here. Consider a visit if you are in need of help.

The picture on the back cover of the last issue has been identified as Homecoming for the Class of 1965. The gentleman in sunglasses about to step on the bus is Dennis Wydeven, now practicing in Kaukauna, WI. Bob Knight, now of Walworth County, WI, identified himself, albeit reluctantly, as the third person from the left, smoking a cigarette. He adds that, "What's missing from the picture is the pig that we left loose on the playing field." Apparently the pig was being hidden in the huddle of revelers just behind those visible in the picture. As much embarrassment as it must be to appear in a suit and tie, smoking a cigarette, imagine what the person carrying the pig must have looked like.

The mystery picture in this issue is not really a mystery. As you can see it is Phi Alpha Delta in 1947. My source identified 14 of those in the picture, and I hope that you readers will fill in all the blanks.

FACULTY/ALUMNI NOTES

Prof. Charles Irish recently completed a term as Advisor to the government of Barbados in the taxation of foreign investment income. In addition he has recently lectured on the taxation of natural resources in developing countries at meetings in Trinidad, Tanzania and Sierra Leone.

Prof. Warren Lehman has been invited by the Rockefeller Foundation to work on a study entitled "A New Jurisprudence" at its retreat on Lake Como in Italy.

Prof. Hendrick A. Hartog is a visiting professor here this year. Prof. Hartog holds a JD from NYU (1973) and a Ph.D. from Brandeis (1982). He has taught at Indiana University School of Law since 1977, and will be teaching legal history during his stay here.

Profs. Frank Remington, Herman Goldstein and Walter Dickey have joined with two other professors to co-author a new text on criminal justice administration.

Orrin B. Evans, Class of 1937, who spent 33 years as a member of the faculty and dean of the Law Center at the University of Southern California, has been honored by that institution with the creation of an endowed professorship in his name.

Lisa Hancy Sivanich, Class of 1978, has been promoted to Assistant Vice President by First Wisconsin Trust Company.

Robert F. Froehle, Class of 1949, has been named Vice Chairman of Equitable Life Assurance Society, the nation's third largest insurance company. He will become chairman next year.

John O. Schnorr, Class of 1975, has been promoted to Assistant Manager of Employee Plans at Northwestern Mutual Insurance.

Donald Hagman, Class of 1959, a professor at UCLA Law School, was killed in an accident on June 20, 1982. A memorial fund is being established in his name.

William A. Campman, Class of 1902, passed away in August. Believed to be Wisconsin's last remaining Spanish-American War veteran, Campman was 103. He was also the oldest living alumni of this Law School. Mr. Campman practiced law in Neillsville, Wisconsin for 68 years and maintained a full schedule until he retired at the age of 93.

DEAN HELSTAD ANNOUNCES RESIGNATION

On June 29 Dean Orrin Helstad officially tendered his resignation as Dean, suggesting to Chancellor Shain that the resignation take effect on July 1, 1983 to allow at least one year of lead time in which to select a successor. The Chancellor has promised to appoint a Search and Screen Committee early this fall.

Dean Helstad stated in his letter of resignation that his decision is largely a personal one. The Dean noted that he had devoted over 10 years to Law School administration. "I concluded that I ought to make a decision now as to whether to try to continue in administration for the remainder of my professional career", he wrote. "I believe my decision to retire from administration and return to teaching and research will be in the best interests of both myself and the Law School."

Dean Helstad said he had "found a great sense of personal satisfaction, despite occasional frustrations, in having been able to serve the University and its Law School, both of which have been very important positive influences in my life." He explained, however, that he thought that a new dean could bring some fresh perspectives to the position "and a certain degree of new vitality which are important elements in the life of an institution like the Law School."

Dean Helstad, 60, is a 1950 graduate of the Law School. He joined the Law School faculty in 1961 after having worked 11 years for the Wisconsin Legislative Council doing legislative research, bill drafting and law revision work. He became Associate Dean in January 1972, Acting Dean on July 1, 1975, and Dean on July 1, 1976. He expects to return to teaching at the end of his term as Dean after taking some time off "to gear up for teaching again." He also expressed the hope that he would find more time to devote to alumni relations than he has been able to find during his term as Dean.

NOTE: Chancellor Irving Shain has appointed a nine member committee to search for a new dean. The committee is chaired by Law Professor Margo Melli, and expects to make a special effort to attract women and minority applicants. Candidates should possess a record of scholarly achievement or evidence of creative contributions sufficient to qualify them for tenured rank in the University faculty. Research and scholarly experience, strong communication skill, and leadership qualities are essential. Anyone interested in applying or suggesting a candidate should contact Prof. Melli by February 1, 1983.

Other committee members are: Law School faculty J. Willard Hurst, Gordon Baldwin, Walter Dickey, Judith Lachman, Theodore Schneyer, William Whitford; law student Linda White; psychology professor Leonard Berkowitz; political science professor Bernard Cohen; and School of Education Dean John Palmer.

INTERSESSION IN THE ROCKIES

In the very early morning of Sunday, May 23, four University station wagons headed west out of Madison for a 3500 mile trip to Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana and South Dakota. Far from a vacation, however, this journey was actually Environmental Studies 674: Field Studies in Water and Energy Resources Management, a regular intersession course offered by the Institute for Environmental Studies and taught for the fifth time by Law Professor James MacDonald. Each year 15 to 18 students plus Prof. MacDonald and one teaching assistant pack camping and cooking gear into the cars and head west for three weeks of lectures, discussions, on-site tours and, oh yes, an exam at the end.

Planning for this year's trip, facilitated by four successful trips in the past, began last winter. Announcement of the course and an informational session brought out many more interested students than would be able to go. Prof. MacDonald decided to personally interview all applicants to find out not only the depth of their interest in natural resources and environmental law, but also their willingness to share in the driving, cooking and chores which are part of the experience. He also inquired about basic camping experience. "We can't take inexperienced campers who might panic if they awoke with a foot of water in the tent some night," Prof. MacDonald explained. In fact, this year the group awoke one morning with three inches of snow outside, and were forced to make a hurried trip down from the mountains to escape the spring storm. Five law students and 10 from other disciplines made up this year's group.

Along the way, students do not simply watch the scenery go by. Each car is equipped with a 2-way radio, and talks on geology, hydrology, geography, history and law are given during the drives.

This year the group spent only three nights under roofs. They cook most of their own food, purchased cooperatively by each car group, and are charged for their transportation. In addition each student pays for three credits of intersession tuition, and must prepare and deliver a 15-minute talk sometime on the trip on a topic relating to the course and the student's own interest and research.

The meat of the course is lectures delivered by 20-25 experts and tours of water and energy projects along the way. Speakers include, by design, strong proponents of their own views. "We deliberately try to balance the presentations. If a spokesman for a mining company speaks to the class, we will also have someone representing conservation interests," said MacDonald. This year saw speakers from local, state, and federal governmental units; representatives from a number of energy-related companies; lawyers in private practice whose clients include all possible interested parties; academicians; journalists; and representatives of non-profit institutions. Students toured the Denver Water Board, the Coors Brewery, the Bureau of Reclamation's Grand Valley Irrigation District, Flaming Gorge Dam, Decker Coal mine (one of the world's largest strip mines), a mine mouth power plant at Colstrip, Montana, the Rapid City flood plain project, and the Oahe Dam. "This dam has been in the news a lot recently since it holds the 50,000 acre-feet of water South Dakota is selling for a coal slurry pipeline," said MacDonald.

Camping out not only reduces the cost of the course, but also permits close, first-hand observation of the climatic and geographic differences encountered. During one day's trip, the class passes from the irrigated eastern slope of the Rockies, over the mountains, and into the dry western basin.

Prof. MacDonald

Environmental Studies 674, Class of 1982
Poses in Drag Line Bucket at Decker Mine, Montana.

The various needs for water and the differences in the laws regulating its distribution are more apparent with these observations. Some campgrounds are particularly scenic and two free days allow a little time to enjoy these areas. Evenings may find speakers and the class around a campfire, or some of the students taking in the local nightlife. "After listening to a vice president of some mining company debate the local Sierra Club lawyer, there may in fact be educational value in rubbing elbows in the evening with locals who work in the mine," explained MacDonald.

Throughout the trip, students have the opportunity to see law in action, witnessing firsthand the physical and social effects of the legal and administrative processes on the use of the region's natural resources. Students experience the physical dimension of resource problems while hearing daily from the persons responsible for seeking solutions. Students come away from the course with a better understanding of the limits and potentials of law in addressing these problems.

1981-82 FUND DRIVE REPORT

I have a fear that by reporting the results of the last Alumni Fund Drive at the same time that this year's drive gets underway I will prejudice this year's result. Why, some of you may ask, should we give again this year when last year was such a big success? The answer, of course, is that the need for funds independent of state appropriations is increasing even faster than the generosity of our alumni.

Last year was indeed a year of generosity. Most obvious is an increase of more than two hundred percent in the total amount contributed to the Law School over the average of the past seven years. The amount given, more than $310,000, includes several large gifts to the Law School through the UW Foundation, but almost half the total came directly to WLAA. This latter amount is itself a doubling of the average we have received in the last seven years.

Not included in these figures are still more contributions which have been pledged or received for our Capital Fund Drive. These gifts include the income of a trust totaling more than $1 million to be used for student financial aids. You will be hearing more about the Capital campaign in this next year as we strive to meet our goal of $3 million in endowment funds to help the Law School with its needs for years to come.

Perhaps the most encouraging sign in this pleasant report is the substantial increase in the number of alumni making contributions. The figure jumped 36% over the average during the last seven years, and 84% over the previous year. While rare and unexpected million dollar gifts are always welcome, professional fund raisers would rather have a larger number of regular contributors for continued success in annual giving campaigns. The trick will be to hold onto all of you, and even to improve our record amounts the 90% of our alumni who do not contribute.

I must admit that we were not alone last year in reporting excellent fund raising results. Many explanations can be offered for this outpouring, not the least of which were tax law changes which may have encouraged giving before the end of 1981. I would hope, however, that at least in our alumni the increased interest and giving resulted more from a realization of our need, the problems we are encountering as tax support weakens, and the willingness to personally help insure the continued success and improvement of this Law School.

If this is the true explanation, I have no need for concern over the success of the 1982-3 Annual Fund Drive.

Thank you for your help,

THE LIGHTER SIDE

Did you hear about the doctor, architect and lawyer who were arguing about who's profession was the oldest? After wrangling a bit, the doctor said, "Mine must be the oldest. Just look at the Bible. It says that God created Adam from Eve's rib. That is surgery, and that makes medicine the oldest profession."

"Not so fast," answered the architect, "after all, God created the heavens and the earth out of chaos. Now that was an architectural triumph, and that makes my profession the oldest!"

After reflecting a moment the attorney responded, "I've listened to both of you, but surely you'll agree that the legal profession must be the oldest. After all, who do you suppose created all that chaos?"

Then there is a revised version of God's conversation with Moses before the flight from Egypt. God said, "There is both good news and bad news. The good news is that plagues shall smite your Egyptian oppressors. The Nile shall be turned to blood, and frogs and locusts shall cover the fields. Gnats and flies shall infest the Pharaoh's people, and their cattle shall die and rot in the pastures. Hail and darkness shall visit punishment upon the land of Egypt. Then I will lead the children of Israel forth, parting the waters of the Red Sea so that they may cross, and thereafter strewing the desert with manna so that they may eat!"

And Moses said, "Oh, Lord, that is wonderful news, but tell me what is the bad news?"

The Lord replied, "It will be up to you, Moses, to write the environmental impact statement."
