DEAN'S Annual REPORT

Each year as part of the Spring Program, the Dean gives a report at the Alumni Luncheon. Its contents are of interest to all who received their legal education at Wisconsin, and are reproduced here in abbreviated form.

Last year, in my annual report to the alumni, I stressed the multiple goals of a large modern-day law school like the University of Wisconsin Law School. I did this in the hope of conveying to you a better understanding of our goals and operations, for it is clear that although our main goal is to prepare students for the practice of law, it is not our only goal. This year I want to pursue that theme further by focusing on the internal administrative structure of the law school. I do this not to emphasize form over substance but as a vehicle to illustrate and to inform you of the multiple facets of our educational enterprise. First, however, let me review briefly a few of the things which normally are dealt with in a dean's annual report.

Our faculty continues to teach, do research and engage in a variety of forms of public service with enthusiasm. In September, 1978, our faculty will be augmented by the addition of two members. Joining the faculty will be Dan Bernstine and Kenneth Davis.

Foster McCree

U. S. Solicitor General Wade McCree addressed a capacity audience at the Law School in a noon-day lecture on April 5, 1978. He described the work of the Solicitor's office, which represents the federal government in civil litigation before the United States Supreme Court. Of the 4,000 cases (includes petitions for certiorari) before the Supreme Court each year, the Solicitor General's staff participates in about 2,200 of them.

Solicitor General McCree is a 1944 graduate of Harvard Law School. He served as a U. S. District Judge in Eastern Michigan from 1961-66, as a member of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the sixth circuit, and became Solicitor General in 1977.

He was introduced by his close friend, Professor G. W. Foster.

Bernstine has been teaching for the past three years at Howard University School of Law in Washington, D.C. Professor Bernstine specializes in Civil Procedure and also will be teaching other subjects such as Labor Law. Mr. Davis has been an associate for the past two years with the Washington law firm of Covington and Burling. He will be teaching Corporations, Corporate Taxation and Securities Regulation, and also will participate from time to time in coaching our moot court teams. As far as I am aware, we will not have any faculty members leaving us permanently, and so this brings our faculty to full strength.

Our faculty members continue to be much in demand as visitors at other law schools, and a number of them were at other institutions during the 1977-78 academic year. In the fall semester, Bill Foster taught at Arizona State and June Weisberger taught at Michigan. In the spring semester, Willard Hurst was at Florida, Chuck Irish at Hawaii and Walter Raushenbush at Arizona. Tom Heller spent all year at the University of Miami, and Mark Tushnet spent the year at the University of Texas.

In addition, a number of our professors were on research or service leaves, including Joel Handler who spent the spring semester in England under a grant from the German Marshall fund and Zig Zile who spent the fall semester at the University of Helsinki under a research grant which is part of an exchange program between the University of Wisconsin-Madison and the University of Helsinki. Professor Stephen Cohen spent the year at the State Department in Washington, D.C. Professors Shirley Abrahamson and Frank Tuerkheimer continue to serve in their respective positions as Justice of the Wisconsin Supreme Court and U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Wisconsin.

As in the past several years, we are holding total enrollment at about 880 students. We continue to get many more well-qualified applicants than we can take, and in general there has been no abatement of the admissions pressures which we have faced in the last ten years.

The job market for our graduates also continues to be good. We continue to place between 40 and 50% of our graduates in private practice, with the next largest category being a variety of forms of law-related government jobs.

Let me return now to the theme of our goals, programs and organizational structure. The multiple goals of the Law School are set forth in the mission statement which was last revised by our faculty in November, 1973. According to this statement, it is the mission of the University of Wisconsin Law School to (1) provide a basic law degree program of professional legal education; (2) provide advanced professional degree programs; (3) engage in comprehensive scholarly research in the law and the law's working relations to the general organization and processes of society; (4) provide teaching assistance to the University Extension and other similar continuing education programs; and (5) provide service to public agencies, community groups and the like through the application of legal research and expertise to the solution of societal problems.

To accomplish these goals efficiently and effectively, a certain degree of administrative organization is essential. We operate on a total budget of around $3 million a year and have roughly a hundred employees, including faculty but excluding part-time lecturers. Almost exactly two-thirds of our budget goes for instruction and supporting services. The remainder is divided approximately equally between expenditures for library, research and financial aid for students. About $700,000 of the total budget comes from funds other than regular University appropriations, including the major portion of the funding for student financial aid, clinical instruction and research.

Let me describe briefly our organizational set-up. The Dean, at least in theory, is in charge of the administration of the Law School. He is appointed by the Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin-Madison and serves at the pleasure of the Chancellor. He presides over faculty meetings, appoints faculty committees, and is responsible for preparation of the budget and for seeing to it that it is not overspent. He must be concerned with a variety of external and internal relations, and in general must muddle through mountains of paperwork and red tape in the course of a year.

The main administrative office and its various branches takes care of such matters as assuring that admissions files are kept in proper order, students are properly registered, student grade records and other records are kept, typing for the faculty is done, people are paid on time and in the right amounts, and materials are duplicated for classwork and other purposes.

There are two associate deans who devote most of their administrative effort to dealing with students and their various requests and problems, scheduling of classes, assignment of office and parking space, and a variety of other matters relating to the academic program and some non-academic affairs of the law school. These associate deans are faculty members who are appointed to these positions generally for terms of two years and who devote approximately half of their time to teaching and the remainder of their time to the administrative work. This is illustrative of the close relationship between teaching, policy making and administration in the Law School.

One Law Firm Says It With a Check

There is an assistant dean for placement and alumni affairs. Ed Reisner, whom many of you know, holds this position. He runs the placement office and also devotes some of his time to the affairs of the Alumni Association as Executive Secretary of that organization.

Many of you also know Arnon Allen who has a joint appointment as Chairman of the Extension Law Department and Associate Dean for outreach services.

An assistant to the dean, Ruth Doyle is in charge of financial aids for students, pre-law advising, and the editing and production of our alumni magazine, the Gargoyle.

Another member of our administrative team is the law librarian, who in his administrative capacity is the equivalent of an associate dean. As most of you know, Maury Leon has held this position for many years and has done a fine job of running this major support service for our instructional and research programs. Our law library now contains approximately 200,000 volumes.

The use of faculty members on a part-time basis in what supposedly are largely administrative positions may not be the most efficient way to administer a law school, but it is consistent with the concept of faculty governance which is strongly held at the University of Wisconsin as well as at many other institutions of higher education. In theory, the concept means that the faculty has a dominant voice in educational

"Our partners believe that qualified students should not be denied the opportunity to obtain a law school education by reason of financial constraints. Accordingly, we are pleased to support the scholarship program at the Law School."

policy while the dean is in charge of administration, but the distinction often is difficult to draw. It is more accurate to say that the respective roles of the faculty and dean have merged into a concept of shared governance. In recent years, students also have been given a voice in governance through participation in the activities of various committees. In fact, some committees are rather heavily involved in administration as well as policy making. I need therefore to refer at least briefly to the committee structure in the Law School if I am to give you a fairly complete picture of the administrative organization.

Committees are appointed by the Dean at the beginning of each academic year. By way of illustration, the following standing committees operated during the 1977-78 academic year:

1. Academic Planning. The main functions of this committee are to advise the dean on budgetary priorities and to engage in long-range planning.

2. Admissions. This committee, consisting of three faculty members, carries perhaps the heaviest administrative burden of any committee. It must examine the credentials of the roughly 2,000 applicants for admission and decide whom to admit in order to make up the entering class of roughly 280 students each year.

3. Continuing Legal Education. This is one of our newer standing committees. Its main function is to act as a policy and advisory board for continuing legal education and outreach programs.

4. Curriculum. This committee periodically reviews the curriculum or segments of it and reports its recommendations to the whole faculty. The committee has been relatively inactive in the last two years, but we may undertake a major curricular study next year.

5. Faculty Recruiting. As the name suggests, this committee searches out and screens applicants for positions on the faculty and makes recommendations to the faculty as to whom to offer appointments in a particular year.

6. Financial Aids. This committee assists in the administration of our financial aid program for students.

7. Legal Education Opportunities. This committee generally oversees our Legal Education Opportunities Program for minority and disadvantaged students. It engages in recruitment of such students, reviews applications for admission to Law School, makes recommendations to the Admissions Committee as to whom to admit, and handles a variety of other matters relating to this program.

WLAA Boards Meet - Directors Adopt Budget

As they do traditionally, the Boards of Directors and of Visitors met in connection with the Spring Program on April 22, to discuss the Alumni Fund Budget for 1978-79. There was lengthy discussion of the deficit (approximately $11,000) which exists in the Scholarship budget, attributed to higher than anticipated educational costs. It was voted that money from the long term loan fund be used to cancel the deficit. In a companion decision, the Budget for scholarships in 1978-79 was cut from $24,000 to $5,000, a cut of nearly 20% of the total amount available for non-LEO scholarships.

The Board of Directors devoted much of its meeting to a discussion of investment of Law Alumni Association funds presently managed by the University of Wisconsin Foundation. An ad hoc Committee, of which President Russell is chairman, will give serious consideration to this matter in conformance with investment goals approved by the Board.

Retiring President Flaherty re-appointed Robert B. L. Murphy and appointed James Schipper, Viroqua, and William Rosenbaum, Madison, to the Board of Visitors. Lloyd Barbee, Milwaukee, was elected Chairman of the Board and Mark Bonady, also of Milwaukee, was named Vice-Chairman. The annual visitation was set for November 5-6, 1978.

1977 FUND DRIVE ~ Disappointing Results

Ed Reisner, Director

In reporting on the major activity of the Association, one is tempted to emphasize only its good points. The total amount contributed to this fund drive was the second highest in the nine years of its existence. The average gift was slightly smaller than last year's record ($93.00). An encouraging amount of giving came from young alums.

Sadly, however, it is also necessary to report the negative side of this Fund Drive. Efforts to build both the number of contributors and the total size of the fund slipped during the past year. The $92,000 realized by the Fund Drive is about 25% less than the amount given last year. Perhaps more importantly, the number of alumni making contributions fell by more than a hundred from the past two Fund Drives. What went wrong? Why this decline in interest in the University of Wisconsin Law School?

We look vainly for answers to these questions. The Fund Drive was conducted at the same time and in a similar manner to the Fund Drives of the past. Is a new approach and goal necessary to stimulate interest? At their most recent meeting, the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association voted to create a study committee to examine the goals and methods of our fund drive. Consideration is being given to more emphasis on class giving and giving for specific projects to improve the school and the quality of education it can offer. This would significantly alter the current goal of raising funds primarily for student financial aids.

The lists attached to this Fund

Drive report describe in detail the origin of the monies which will be used for activities of the Association this year. Our most heartfelt thanks go to those of our alums and friends who have assisted us in the past. Our most sincere entreaties go out to those who have not. No Law School can maintain its greatness without the monetary and moral support of its alumni. Tax revenues provided by the state for the maintenance of this school can and do support only the basic level of education. Alumni money has in the past and perhaps will be applied more in the future to increments of instruction and facilities which assist this School in maintaining its reputation as one of the finest in the country.

Help us as we strive to meet that goal.

Awards Convocation - Part of Spring Program

As it always is, the Awards Convocation on April 22, 1978, which offers an opportunity to honor the special achievements of Law students, was a well-attended, happy and gala occasion. Parents, children, spouses and friends of the designated recipients attend the presentations and the reception which followed. Law Partners (spouses of students) provided the refreshments.

The announcement of the newly elected members of the Order of the Coif, the most prestigious award for scholarship, is the climax of the events. All the awards follow:

- U.S. Law Week Award Susan Bittker
Most satisfactory progress during the third year.
- University of Wisconsin Foundation Award Rex Ewald
To the student most improved from first to third semester.
- Mathys Memorial Award for Appellate Advocacy Susan Schauf

TRIAL ADVOCACY — UNDER GULLICKSON

It took 91 lawyers, 17 student court reporters from Madison Business College and Madison Area Technical College, plus a special agent from the FBI to assist Professor Stuart Gullickson in teaching 79 students in his Trial Advocacy course during the past spring semester.

The students were divided into three sections. Usually the lawyers taught in teams of four. Most teams demonstrated the examination of a witness in which the attorneys were the judge, witness, and opposing counsel. For the balance of a class, the students were divided into small groups and each was supervised by one of the lawyers. The students then examined a witness with students filling the same roles and the teaching lawyers conducting a critique.

According to Gullickson, the object of the course is "to begin the development of skills in examining witnesses." It will not make students into trial lawyers, nor help them to decide whether they can eventually become trial lawyers.

"Not enough is known about the inner workings of peoples' minds to be able to make that prediction," he said. "We don't know how to measure the human qualities which produce courtroom success. Intelligence is one of them, but intelligence alone is not enough. Advocates also need an innate understanding of human nature, a barrel of common sense, and the tenacity of bulldogs. They must be both sensitive and objective; both self-disciplined and flexible. They must be so stable emotionally that they can frequently 'lose' in public (as lay people, not as trial lawyers, perceive who 'loses' law suits), be so honest that they can resist pressures from clients for results at all costs, and be so ethical that their standards can undergo public scrutiny in every trial."

Law Review vs. Faculty

For the first time in memory, the law review managed to sneak past the Faculty in the annual doubleheader softball game. The score in the first contest was Law Review — many, Faculty — not so many, while the second game was much closer.

To the Faculty's credit, the game was played on a wet field and the Faculty squad was decimated by injuries, trades, leaves, desertions and the presence of two ducks in left field. Fielding star for the Faculty was Arlen Christiansen, third base, who at one point in the game managed a string of two consecutive attempts without an error. Observers also commented favorably on the Bill Whitford-John Kidwell (pitcher-first base) pick off play. While the play did not in fact pick any runner off, it did, along with a "no lead off" rule, keep the runners close.
